With the development of communication technologies, a typical broadcast or cable television system may provide not only standard television programming, but also may include other interactive features or services. In order to receive this special programming, the television set of the user or subscribers has a number of input lines or ports for receiving a plurality of signals from the cable or broadcast system. In the exemplary case of a cable television system, these lines or ports may be, for example, for selecting the home or set top box, as well as various channels, and receiving the special programming such as sports, news, education, etc. Due to the increase in the number of input lines or ports and the number of programming options or services available through these lines or ports, the display of information such as a channel number, program name, current or selected programming, etc. on the screen of the television set can be overwhelming and confusing to the user. The present invention provides a method and apparatus to minimize the amount of time needed to generate a display for a first image frame in response to the user switching between channels. The present invention generally relates to a system and a method for generating a channel map display for use in a television channel guide. The system and method of the present invention includes a system controller that sends information to a display device regarding the selected channel based upon the user switching between channels. The information includes a current channel for the selected channel, a programming, a time for the programming and a state of the programming. In one embodiment, the information regarding the current channel includes a program number for the current channel, a channel number for the current channel, and a channel name for the current channel. The information regarding the programming includes a current program for the current channel and a time for the current program. The 4bc0debe42
