One-time entry module. A KeyMACRO is designed to be a single-use, read-only device. It has no control logic, and no storage. Therefore, a KeyMACRO can be programmed to allow an operator to enter a single character of data to an external device, such as a keyboard or storage. The basic types of KeyMACRO are: INITIALIZED: Any KeyMACRO is initially in the INITIALIZED state. DONE: A KEYMACRO in the DONE state is the last KEYMACRO to be used to transfer data between a human operator and the external device. ERROR: A KEYMACRO in the ERROR state has encountered a hardware or software error. It cannot be reused until the hardware is fixed or a new KEYMACRO is plugged in. KERNEL: A KEYMACRO in the KERNEL state provides a communication channel to and from a specific sub-program. KeyMACRO commands: INITIALIZED: Moves a KEYMACRO to the INITIALIZED state. DONE: Transmits a single character of data to an external device. ERROR: Causes the KEYMACRO to enter the ERROR state. KERNEL: Passes the KEYMACRO into a sub-program. Programming: KEYMACRO Program 101 - BASIC KeyMACRO Programming Guide BASIC KeyMACRO programming is very simple. Most BASIC programmers are able to build their first program in just a few minutes. The most important thing you need to know is that a KeyMACRO takes data in at the bottom and sends it out at the top.
